Introduction Annivers

In September 2015, a two-day conference to mark the 50th anniversary of the journal's founding will examine the tenets of the journal and the questions around the relationship(s) between the challenges and like-minded groups in the early twenty-first century. In this issue, examining the

The first paper in this section, 'Economic Models and the Importance of Identity' by Reza Zia-Ebrahimi, presents a modern analytical approach to the model 'identity' as a concept. An interesting approach to this concept is through unique approaches to identity.

The second paper in this section, 'Nationally Mixed Populations and the Outside the Family' by Tarry Hum, examines the role of nationally mixed people outside the family in self-identification.

Next, Michael St. Pierre's 'Sexuality for Research: Inclusion and Considerations' offers several considerations to provide opportunities for research. It details how this approach is looking at the article's focus.

Lastly in this section, 'The Variability of Overweight and Obesity: National Characteristics and the Main Objective of Health Policies' by Philip James Proudfoot examines how national characteristics shape the variability of the prevalence of
